

Chris Hassall

Global External Relations Officer, P&G

Chris is a 28-year veteran of P&G, with global experience that spans functions and regions.

He has extensive experience working with governments, regulators, news media, professional organizations and advocacy groups around the world.

As P&G's Global External Relations Officer, Chris leads the company's external relations activities worldwide including news media relations, brand publicity, consumer relations, employee communications, regulatory and technical relations, government and community relations, philanthropy, and corporate reputation.

Chris is a 28-year veteran of P&G, with global experience that spans functions and regions. He joined P&G as a research scientist and went on to build extensive experience working with governments, regulators, news media, professional organizations and advocacy groups around the world.

Chris has experienced many countries and cultures, having lived, studied or worked in countries on five of the world's seven continents. Raised in the UK, Chris obtained his bachelor's degree in Wales, his master's degree in Canada and his doctorate degree in the United States. He has been the External Relations leader in North America, Central and Eastern Europe, the Middle East and Africa, Greater China, the Asia region, and now globally.

Chris was a member of the core P&G team that created and launched the External Relations function in 2000. He helped create approaches to building consumer advocacy for P&G brands and has developed new approaches to increase the Company's crisis communications capability globally.
